@sybermad93 Society has been not mentioning them for decades. They still exist, they will still exist. Trans people suicide rates are alarming and its because of logic like yours. "Lets ignore their struggle, put 0 effort trying to understand, ignore them completely untill they dont exist anymore"
Newsflash, new kids will be born, they will grow up, some of them will identify as trans, problem continues. So how abotu you treat people with respect and live your life.

Aren't trans people the ones claiming gender and sex are two different things? If that is the case, "sexual preference" has nothing to do with gender, so you can't possibly be transphobic when your basing your sexual preferences on sex, not gender.

I think it's really poorly formulated, I think what he meant to say was "If you are sexually attracted to someone, and discover that he/she is trans, then you are transphobic". I don't think it's right either, but it's not AS stupid as it seems to be.

 Devil's advocate here. Nil Spookoian phrased it in the worst possible way, but I kinda get what they meant. Assume that you meet a hot girl and you find her attractive. Now, you learn that she's trans, and solely based on this information, you stop finding her attractive. That would be transphobic.

Think about the fact that many trans people don't even need to come out to their lovers: a trans woman after a successful sex reassignment surgery can totally pass cis even if you have sex with her. Maybe one of your last lovers was a trans person.

Reply

megamono 3 Nov
 but if you don't like guys you shouldn't be forced to like her when you find out she used to be a man. it's like if you become super fat the other person is not forced to keep liking you, "if you don't like the fat guy you are fat phobic".

I'm trans and I honestly understand if someone would reject me based on that fact. I think it would be unfair to not be given the chance, but you cant help what you like. If you already know you don't like men there's no point trying to be with men. If you know that you don't like trans people then there's no point dating trans people. We want to be accepted and not judged BASED on the fact that we're trans, but it's definitely a preference. I don't know if other trans people agree with me though.

Reply

ptrucz 9 Feb
@adamize Thank you for being understandable. I guess I wouldn't date a transgender but I would 100% respect then as the gender they want to be treated as and I would never say that transgender is an abomination or a disease or a sin. It isn't.
