This study focuses on the concept of humanism in Islam and its significance in the Indonesian Criminal Code (KUHP). The study aims to examine the integration of Sharia principles and humanism into Indonesia 's legal system , particularly in the context of criminal law . It employs a normative juridical research approach and utilizes secondary and primary data sources for content analysis . Overall , the study provides a clear introduction to the topic and research objectives . It establishes the importance of humanism in promoting social justice, equality , and compassion in Islam. Additionally, it highlights the influence of Dutch law on the Indonesian Criminal Code, raising concerns about its impact on human dignity and fundamental rights. However, the study could benefit from some improvements.

1. Firstly , abstracts lack a concise and focused research objective . Clearly stating the main research objective would help readers understand the specific aim of the study.
2. Furthermore , while the study mentions that its findings reveal the incomplete incorporation of Sharia principles into Indonesia 's civil , commercial , and penal law , it does not elaborate on these findings . Providing detail of the main findings would enhance the study's informative value.
3. The study briefly mentions the prohibition of freedom of expression and the limited implementation of Islamic law in Indonesia , specifically in the province of Aceh . Expanding on these aspects , including the reasons behind the restrictions on freedom of expression and the implications of limited implementation , would provide a more comprehensive understanding of the issues discussed.
4. The study concludes by mentioning the practical and theoretical significance of the research and the proposed recommendations for promoting humanism in Islamic criminal law. However, it does not explicitly state what these recommendations are. Including a brief overview of the proposed recommendations would add clarity to the study's conclusion.

5. Lastly, the study lacks a clear statement regarding the potential implications or significance of the study's findings. It would be beneficial to mention how the integration of humanism into the Indonesian Criminal Code could contribute to protecting human rights and advancing a more just and equitable legal system.

This research article covers different aspects related to humanism in Islam and its connection to criminal law. The discussion on the Islamic perspective of humanism, the classification of crimes in Sharia law, and the incorporation of Islamic principles in the criminal justice systems of various Muslim nations provide a solid foundation for understanding the subject matter. Additionally, the section addresses the Indonesian context and the influence of Dutch law on the Indonesian Criminal Code (KUHP). It discusses the specific articles in the KUHP related to adultery and highlights the recent amendments in the new KUHP, which have been met with controversy. The inclusion of information about the implementation of ICL in Aceh province and the criticisms and debates surrounding it adds depth to the analysis. Here are some specific comments.

1. The literature review section must provide an overview of the concept of humanism in Islam and its connection to criminal law. It should present in detail the multidimensional nature of humans in Islam, emphasizing their capacity for development and the importance of worshiping God. The review must also discuss the integration of humanism into Islamic teachings and its compatibility with principles such as freedom, human rights, and rational inquiry.
2. Moreover, the review could benefit from a broader range of scholarly sources. While some references are provided, including more diverse and recent sources would strengthen the credibility and currency of the literature review. It is also important to critically analyze the sources cited to evaluate their relevance and reliability.
3. The results must briefly mention the need for Indonesia to incorporate Islamic humanism, particularly due to the country's Muslim majority and the protection it could provide for minorities. It should delve into the specific implications or practical applications of this integration.
4. The discussion section should suggest recommendations for aligning the criminal justice system with humanism principles, raising public awareness, promoting cooperation between international and regional entities, and providing training for stakeholders.
5. The discussion on the Indonesian Criminal Code (KUHP) could be more balanced by acknowledging the efforts made to reform and modernize the code and considering its historical context and the broader legal framework in Indonesia. While the section highlights some controversial amendments, it does not fully explore their reasons or the ongoing debates within Indonesian society.

	Here are some more suggestions for authors to improve the manuscript.	Thanks a lot, respected reviewer.
1	The study could provide a more nuanced analysis of the implementation of Islamic Criminal Law (ICL) in Aceh province. While it briefly mentions the criticisms of caning as a form of punishment, a more comprehensive examination of the challenges, benefits, and impact of ICL on human rights in Aceh would enhance the discussion.	Thank you for your kind suggestions. We have now added a more nuanced analysis of the implementation of Islamic Criminal Law (ICL) in Aceh province. We have also added a more comprehensive examination of the challenges, benefits, and impact of ICL on human rights in Aceh would enhance the discussion. Please see pages 11-13
2	The paper could benefit from a more systematic organization. It currently repeats similar information in different subsections, which can make it less coherent and harder to follow. Streamlining the content and avoiding unnecessary repetition would enhance its clarity and effectiveness.	Dear reviewer, Thank you for your kind comments. Done as suggested.
3	The discussion on humanism in Islam could benefit from additional references and citations to support the claims made. Providing more specific examples from Islamic teachings and texts would strengthen the argument.	Dear reviewer, Thank you for your kind comments. Done as suggested. Please see pages 14-19
