This research has discovered and examined several sources from numerous sources. Each channel has its own benefits and drawbacks. Andrian Permadi's channel is excellent for Indonesian test takers because he explains in Indonesian and he has a lot subscribers, but the Material he presents is out of current. PrepScholar TOEFL also has many subscribers on their YouTube channel, and their tutors are very knowledgeable about the TOEFL test. Additionally, some of their videos have transcripts, however their videos only have English subtitles. The last YouTube channel is Prep TOEFL, has the most subscribers compared to the other channels that has been researched, however it only includes English subtitles.

This research also revealed that their YouTube channel contains a large number of tips and tricks, the majority of which are extremely effective for improving TOEFL scores, particularly in the reading section.

B. Suggestion

The researcher suggests that this knowledge be disseminated to students, particularly English Education Department students. Because this knowledge might help students enhance their TOEFL results and satisfy the minimum score standards. In addition, students who wish to improve their reading abilities are encouraged to spend a great deal of time reading English. Improving reading skills requires much effort. It is strongly recommended to start from YouTube and learn some tips and tricks.

Future researchers are encouraged to delve further into the channels collected by this study and to continue searching for new channels on YouTube, as YouTube continues to expand over time. So, there is a strong probability that there will be improved routes for obtaining TOEFL reading tips and techniques.
