

CHAPTER V

CLOSURE

In this chapter, the researcher presents conclusions and suggestions. Furthermore, the researcher considered the suggestions from the overall findings, discussions, and conclusions from this study regarding the techniques used by students in reading journals and their difficulties in reading journals in the EAP Course.

A. Conclusion

In this concluding section, the researcher draws conclusions. There are several points that can be concluded as follows:

1. In this study, there are 8 reading techniques described, namely Intensive Reading, Extensive Reading, Speed Reading, Skimming, Scanning, Summarizing, Making Inferences, and PQRST. From the techniques described, students use techniques in reading journals. and it can be seen that students use several techniques with different journals depending on the journal the students read.
2. When reading online journals, students have some difficulties in reading journals such as limited vocabulary, lack of understanding, lack of reading habits, unable to read quickly, unable to read directly such as finding main ideas, keywords, specific information, and points, difficult in summarizing, lacking in critical thinking, and unable to review journal topics. In addition to some of the difficulties experienced by students above, this allows students to apply less and lack mastery of reading techniques as a result students are unable to read journals and have difficulty reading journals, therefore reading techniques can help students experience difficulties when reading journals.

B. Suggestion

Based on the results of the conclusions that have been concluded by the researcher above, the researcher suggests:

1. English Students

Of the several techniques described in this study, students can develop these techniques in reading to make it easier for students to read journals. There are lots of reading techniques that can be applied in reading journals and this is very useful for students in lectures where each course ensures that students read a lot with several book or journal references and especially during EAP courses where students are required to make several writings. scientifically so that students are given the opportunity to read as much as possible especially now that there are so many online journals that can be used. Then, the reading technique is one of the students' solutions to reading more easily and quickly.

2. Further Research

Based on this research about student reading techniques and student difficulties. Which is based on the technique used by students in the findings of this study and students' difficulties when reading journals. The researcher suggests that future researcher can follow up on further research with other reading techniques that students can use in reading some scientific writings in which there are many reading techniques that can be used and allow many of the latest reading techniques to be researched. In addition, the researcher hopes that for future researcher, this research can develop new approaches, skills, and developments.
