This study aims to describe the importance of learning English for Attorney employees. English for Attorney, also known as English for Occupational Purposes (EOP) is the same as English for Specific Purposes (ESP) which requires a special approach in learning it. The design of this research is a method with qualitative descriptive research. The subjects in this study were the Attorney's employee; the object of this study was English which is important for employees based on their perceptions. In collecting data researchers used questionnaires in the Google form and interviews. For the questionnaire, the data was conducted by students' perceptions of English difficulties when learning in the classroom. For interviews, the data provided additional information such as their views on the importance of learning English for themselves, their careers and their institutions. The results of this research were the employees' English skills were in average level of most of employees. The English skills they felt the need to improve were reading and writing. This was due to their difficulty to follow several activities in their work field. Other result is that English is very important to improve the quality of human resources itself. With the increase in human resources, the credibility of the Attorney's Office will also increase and will have a positive impact on the agency.
